

GMO Apples Will Hit Supermarket Shelves In February 2017

written by G. Edward Griffin | January 24, 2017

Okanagan, a Canadian company, will begin selling 'Arctic' GMO apples that are genetically engineered to resist browning. The company has Arctic versions of Golden Delicious, Granny Smith, and Fuji apples, and expects to add more. The only way customers can detect the GMO apples is to scan the product code (not many customers carry around a scanner) or to rely on stores to state they are GMO apples – which most stores have no intention of doing.
