

Here Is A Petition that Gives Trump Legal Standing and Public Support to Stop Childhood Vaccines

Attorney Ralph Fucetola explains that most federal regulations start as citizens' petitions through the Administrative Practices Act and he has filed such a petition with regulations.gov that will give President Trump the legal standing to act on this issue. It also will show popular support to encourage him to do so in the face of the vaccine lobby. The petition asks for a five-year childhood-vaccine moratorium and calls for safety studies that have never been done. Here is the link for the petition and your comments.

Trump's New Chief of Staff General Kelly Ousted Anthony Scaramucci

Trump's new chief of staff General John Kelly fired Anthony Scaramucci, Trump's Director of Communications. Scaramucci had served for only 10 days but, during that time, he supervised the ousting of Reince Priebus, who was Trump's former chief of staff, and who was the main suspect behind White House leaks to the press. Scaramucci also quickly triggered sharp criticism for offensive language and manners. There appears to be an internal shifting for position and power, and it is difficult at this point to know who the white-hats are, if any. -GEG

Australia's Meteorology Agency Caught Erasing Record Low Temperatures

Australia's Bureau of Meteorology has been caught manipulating temperature data. When temperatures are high, they are recorded accurately but, when they are very low, they either are deleted altogether or recorded higher than the thermometers show. The agency refuses to explain why it changes the readings except to say that it is scientifically justified. It forbids skeptics to examine its records and calculations. In the US, NASA and NOAA recently were caught doing the same thing.-GEG

Australia's Bureau of Meteorology (BOM) has been caught red handed erasing record-breaking cold temperatures from its data records.

The BOM has now been shamed by media investigations into ordering a review of its procedures. But it has yet to provide an explanation as to why it made these "adjustments" in the first place.

These "adjustments" seem to go only one way. The BOM is perfectly happy to record and announce it whenever Australia's temperatures hit record-breaking highs. But when the temperatures reach new lows it's a different matter altogether.

For some strange reason that the BOM has been unable to explain, when temperatures go below a certain point it either deletes them as if they had never been – or it enters them into its records at higher temperature than the one actually recorded by its thermometers.

The dodgy adjustments were spotted by investigative journalist Jennifer Marohasy.

Earlier this month, she was contacted by bush meteorologist Lance Pidgeon who had noticed that Goulburn, a town south west of Sydney, had smashed its temperature record with a low of -10.4 degrees Celsius.

Except, the Bureau has since erased this measurement.

According to the Bureau's own rules, the coldest temperature record during a 24-hour period to 9am is recorded as the minimum for that day. So, for Sunday 2 July the carry-over minimum should be -10.4 degrees Celsius. But instead the summary documentation shows -10.0. There is now no public record of -10.4 degrees Celsius.

This is not the first time the BOM has been accused of behaving more like a political activist organization than a scientific one. On every occasion, instead of fessing up to its dodgy antics, it has hidden behind a wall of bluster and pretend-scientific authority.

For example, against the principles of robust science, it refuses to allow its data to be audited independently – or to discuss why or how it makes its temperature adjustments.

Journalist Tells How He Knows That Seth Rich Passed DNC Emails to WikiLeaks

This is the second recording released by Big League Politics. Journalist, Seymour Hersh, describes how Seth Rich sold DNC emails to WikiLeaks. Hersh draws upon his own experience in such matters and also cites an FBI document as proof. Hersch says that WikiLeaks definitely had access to the emails before Rich was killed. [This recording contains vulgar language.]

UPDATE: WikiLeaks does not reveal its sources, however, they tweeted out Seymour Hersch's recording that reveals Seth Rich offered to sell the DNC emails to WikiLeaks, who got the password for the dropbox to take possession of them. WikiLeaks' tweet serves as an endorsement of Hersch's account of events, and that Rich was the DNC leaker.

In an audio recording provided to Big League Politics by a source that currently wishes to remain anonymous, journalist Seymour Hersh confirms that Seth Rich had contacted WikiLeaks with sample emails from the leak. Hersh cites an FBI document as proof for his claim.

“There are no DNC or Podesta emails that exist beyond May 21 or 22, last email from either one of those groups. What the report says is that some time in late Spring... he makes contact with WikiLeaks, that's in his computer,” he says. “Anyway, they found what he had done is that he had submitted a series of documents – of emails, of juicy emails, from the DNC.”

Hersh explains that it was unclear how the negotiations went, but that WikiLeaks did obtain access to a password protected DropBox where Rich had put the files.

Investigator into Murder of Seth Rich Reveals That Seth's Brother Blocked Every Step of His Investigation

Big League Politics has released a mind-blowing recording of Rod Wheeler, the investigator in the Seth Rich murder case, in which he says that Aaron Rich, Seth's brother, blocked him from investigating anything that could lead to the DNC. He was ordered not to investigate Rich's emails, communications with WikiLeaks, personal problems with his DNC supervisor, or the party Seth attended the night of his murder, which included DNC loyalists. Wheeler says that Aaron also prevented him from examining Seth's computer and cell phones to see who he contacted in the days and hours prior to his murder. –GEG

In a phone call provided to Big League Politics by a source who wishes to remain anonymous at this time, private investigator Rod Wheeler explains what happened with the Fox News coverage of Seth Rich – and how brother Aaron Rich was actively attempting to shut down anyone looking into the WikiLeaks connection.

On August 1, Wheeler filed a lawsuit in New York City alleging White House involvement in pushing the story. But in this recording, he explains that he acted on his own in contacting Fox News reporters – and exactly how that all went down. The White House being involved is not mentioned once.

“The story has already blown up, this will only give credence to the story. If Fox News channel broke it, it would seem like conspiracy theories,” Wheeler says the Fox 5 DC reporter texted him. “So she decided that she was going to run with this story, in her mind, so it didn’t seem like a conspiracy theory from Fox News.”

Wheeler said that brother Aaron Rich tried to block Wheeler from looking at Seth’s computer, even though there could be evidence on it. “He said no, he said I have his computer, meaning him,” Wheeler said. “I said, well can I look at it?...He said, what are you looking for? I said anything that could indicate if Seth was having problems with someone. He said no, I already checked it. Don’t worry about it.”

Wheeler said that Seth’s girlfriend told him that Aaron Rich had possession of Seth’s cell phones, but Aaron denied it and said “we’re not going to worry about the cell phones.”

Aaron also blocked Wheeler from finding out about who was at a party Seth attended the night of the murder.
