

White Nationalists Identified on Twitter and Called Racists, One Was Fired from His Job

A Twitter account named 'Yes, You're Racist' is posting photos of participants from the Unite-the-Right march on Friday night, asking viewers to identify the marchers. Because of this, a young man was fired from his job at Top Dog restaurant in Berkley, California. He says he is naturally partial to his own race but has no hatred for other races – and is not a racist. Standing up for one's rights does not equate to wanting to deny rights to others. [The real story here is not that a man was fired from his job because he participated in a White Nationalist demonstration, but that no one questions the media spin that these people are all racists. Some undoubtedly are and some undoubtedly are not –much the same as people who are not members of this group. They are motivated, not by race hatred, but by anger at the double standard in government and media that automatically depicts white people as racists if they object to the agenda of the violent left.] –GEG

White nationalists who appeared at the deadly demonstrations in Charlottesville are being outed on social media – with at least one being fired from his job after his name and picture was posted online.

Cole White, of California, was axed from his restaurant position in Berkeley on Sunday just hours after being publicly identified by a Twitter account known as "Yes, You're Racist."

The page has been putting “Unite the Right” protesters on blast following their violent, hate-fueled rallies in Charlottesville, Virginia, on Friday night and Saturday.

“If you recognize any of the Nazis marching in #Charlottesville, send me their names/profiles and I’ll make them famous,” the user wrote to its more than 180,000 followers.

So far, they’ve succeeded in getting at least one white nationalist fired – and another shamed by thousands.

Peter Cvjetanovic, 20, has gotten so much backlash as a result of “Yes, You’re Racist” identifying him on Saturday night as one of the “angry” torchbearers from Friday’s Emancipation Park rally that he tried to clear his name in an interview with a local TV station in his home city of Reno, Nevada.

“I did not expect the photo to be shared as much as it was,” he told Channel 2 News. “I understand the photo has a very negative connotation. But I hope that the people sharing the photo are willing to listen that I’m not the angry racist they see in that photo.”

White, who worked for the Top Dog restaurant chain, was the very first person that “Yes, You’re Racist” exposed this weekend. His employers said he was fired as a direct result of his involvement in the “Unite the Right” demonstrations.

Read full article here...