Project Veritas Releases Undercover Video of London NY Times Editor Who Admits Anti-Trump Bias

written by GEG | October 18, 2017

The latest Project Veritas undercover video inside the NY Times shows the London homepage editor Desiree Shoe admitting the newspaper's liberal and anti-Trump bias. She also trashes Vice President Mike Pence for being "so religious".

The newest Project Veritas video reveals a New York Times editor trashing Vice President Mike Pence as "fing horrible" and indicating that reporters wrote stories during the presidential campaign with the intention of persuading them to vote against Trump.

"I think one of the things that maybe journalists were thinking about is like, oh, if we write about him, about how insanely crazy he is and how ludicrous his policies are, then maybe people will read it and be like, oh wow, we shouldn't vote for him," Desiree Shoe, the London homepage editor for the NYT, says in the video. She claims in the video that it's hard for journalists to cover Trump in an "unbiased" manner, describing him as "an oblivious idiot."

Shoe is open about her clear bias against Pence in the video, describing the vice president as "fing horrible" and mocking him as "extremely, extremely religious."

As a London editor, it's unclear how large of a role Shoe may have played in the NYT's election coverage. At the very least, her comments are indicative of a left-wing, anti-Trump culture at the NYT that usually remains out of the public eye.

Read full article here…