

“Out of Control Genocide” in Baltimore, Residents Want Martial Law

written by GEG | November 27, 2017

Baltimore has the highest homicide rate in the United States. As usual, authorities are blaming the violence and crime on income inequality and poverty. Drug use (financed by welfare), the media narrative of entitlements, and lack of law enforcement are not considered. Business and residents are leaving in droves because they are not protected against looting or vandalism. More than 100,000 African Americans have no saved money and live from day to day. 46,800 homes are vacant, which is almost 16% of the housing stock. Earlier this year, Mayor Catherine Pugh, called in the Federal Government in hopes to restore order. Most people are looking forward to martial law. {Study this scenario carefully. While in Baltimore City, Maryland, death and despair are a few things that are plentiful as the region descends into chaos. Deindustrialization coupled with depopulation started in the 1960s stripping the city of economic wealth. Many don't want to admit, the city is shrinking as their looking glass is clouded with Kevin Plank's gentrification narrative.

Now, 46,800 homes are vacant— almost 16% of the housing stock as citizens are either leaving the area or being pushed into multi-family complexes by the city. Neighborhoods are rotting away as the local economy crumbles giving way to a surge in homicides. Baltimore is on track for the worse year ever with a homicide rate the highest in the United States.

Baltimore is home to about 615,000 people, but the city has more homicides than New York or Los Angeles, both of which have far larger populations. Earlier this year, Mayor Catherine Pugh called in the Federal Government in hopes to restore order. She was even quoted, “violence in the city is out of control”...

With the police department hemorrhaging officers, local community organized groups have taken to the streets in attempt to slow the momentum of out of control homicides.

The movement is called Baltimore Ceasefire and the group has held two weekend city-wide ceasefire campaigns of "Nobody Kill Anybody"... Both ceasefires have failed.

According to WSJ,

Most murder victims are African-American men, and shootings happen largely in areas where residents live surrounded by poverty, unemployment, drug addiction and crime, city police records show.
