

UN Admits the Paris Climate Treaty IS Useless, Except as Wealth Transfer

written by GEG | November 9, 2017

The United Nations' Environment Committee has admitted in its latest emissions-shortfall report that, even when you add up all the CO₂-reduction pledges from all of the countries that signed on to the Paris Climate Accord, it equals a paltry one-third of what is supposedly needed to stop the world from warming 2-degrees centigrade by the end of this century. There is, however, another outcome about which there is little debate: The Paris Climate Accord would have given a huge economic advantage to China and India over the United States. -GEG
