

AG Jeff Sessions Rescinded Policy That Allowed States to Decide Legality of Marijuana

Just as California's law went into effect allowing the sale of marijuana, and despite the fact that 40 states allow marijuana for personal and/or medical use, Attorney General Jeff Sessions rescinded federal guidelines that previously allowed the states to make their own policy on this issue. Sessions' announcement contradicts President Trump's campaign promises – and also promises by Sessions himself to members of Congress just before he was approved for his appointment to AG. [The federal government continues to wage war against the marijuana industry but will not touch the problem of opioids, which is much more serious and far more deadly. Do you suppose campaign donations by Big Pharma might have something to do with that?]
-GEG

US Congressman Endorses Antifa Handbook that Calls for Violence against Opponents

Democratic Congressman, Keith Ellison, who serves as the deputy chair of the Democratic National Committee, endorsed a book that promotes Antifa, saying that it would “strike fear in the heart” of President Trump. Author Mark Bray’s Antifa: The Anti-Fascist Handbook is full of passages that call for violence against political opponents. The FBI, the Department of Homeland Security, and millions of Americans consider Antifa a domestic terrorist organization. -GEG

On Thursday, Democratic Congressman Keith Ellison, who also serves as the deputy chair of the Democratic National Committee, wrote a post on social media endorsing a book that promotes the far-left Antifa extremist group, promising that it would “strike fear in the heart” of President Trump.

Both the FBI and the Department of Homeland Security consider Antifa a domestic terrorist organization, which is why it came as a shock to many when the high-ranking Democrat official appeared to boost the extremist organization.

Following President Trump’s election, Antifa has committed countless acts of violent extremism. Nationwide Antifa rallies have fomented brutal attacks against innocents and the destruction of large swaths of public and private property.

Read full article here...

Member of Portland Antifa Bullied for Wanting to Cooperate with Police to Prevent Violence

Portland, Oregon: June Davies, a 20-year old activist who joined up with Antifa to help injured protesters, now is being bullied and threatened by the group. She tried to work with the police by providing march routes and other information that could help avoid violence and keep both sides safe. Now she knows that Antifa is not a protest or reform movement but a relatively small group of professionally trained commandos seeking (with the help of their comrades in the media) to create the appearance of widespread outrage against the present administration. While she was seeking safety for the protesters, their leaders are seeking violence and bloodshed. Antifa now considers Davis to be a police informant and says she is “a potential threat to others”, all of which has caused her to feel suicidal from depression. -GEG

A young member of the extremely active Antifa community in Portland has been bullied to the point where she claims to have become suicidal – simply for attempting to work with police to keep both protesters and law enforcement safe.

A 20-year-old activist named June Davies, who goes by the nicknames “Tan” and “Gia” is claiming that she has been receiving threats and warnings to leave the city after texting with a police officer about march routes and other information that could help to keep both sides safe.

"I knew what I was doing," Davies told WW. "It was probably naive of me to think that I could change people's mindsets. I saw the Portland police actually try. I never saw Antifa try."

Davies' first protest was two days after Trump's election, but she immediately felt drawn in with the black clad rioters of the Antifa movement. Soon, she began volunteering as a medic to treat injured protesters.

The young activist, who considers herself an "anarcho-pacifist," happened to meet Portland police Sgt. Jeff Niiya at a protest in June, where he gave her his business card. The next day, according to the Willamette Week, she "became a police informant."

What was the exchange that would lead to a journalist referring to her as an informant? According to Oregon Live, it was a text message asking if a friend had been arrested at a protest the previous week. Sgt. Niiya confirmed that they were not.

Both the police and Davies deny that she was working as an informant, despite being in contact. Her goal, she says, was simply to share information in hopes that police would be aware of what was going on so that people would be less likely to get hurt and medics wouldn't be arrested in the scuffles.

In the hundreds of text messages published by Oregon Live, Davies seemed to be attempting to debunk disinfo from both sides to create peace.

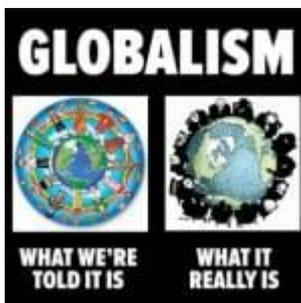

"If somebody from the community talking to us at an event is characterized as an informant, then anybody who talks to the police would be labeled an informant," Portland Lt. Ryan Lee told Oregon Live.

"Anybody that's willing to help paint a better picture to ensure public safety of an event, we're willing to have a conversation with," Lee continued. "We want to be able to talk to members of the public and find out what they need from us.”

Davies was not sharing any activist secrets with police about Antifa members or the protests, but once a “friend” discovered the texts in October and posted them to social media, it was game over. Davies was barred from the community that she had spent the past 11 months developing relationships in, smeared as a “snitch.”

Read full article here...

The Rift Between Bannon and Trump Is about The Purge of Nationalists

Political analyst, Jake Morphonios, comments on the rift between Steve Bannon and President Trump. Jake defines nationalism as a belief that governments are best when representatives are elected from small geographical areas as close as possible to the people they represent. Globalists believe that it is best when most governing bodies are not elected at all but are composed of administrators appointed by a globally cohesive group of political and financial professionals who, instead of following the wishes of the people, determine policies based on what they think is best for society. To bring this about, globalists believe that nations must be stripped of sovereignty and be merged into a global political structure. When Mr. Trump came into office, his first appointments consisted of one-third nationalists and two-thirds globalists. Since then, all nationalists, including Bannon, have been removed. Today, there are no nationalists left. As far as foreign policy and monetary policy are concerned, Jake concludes that the White House now is totally controlled by the Deep State. [Many of our readers will not like this analysis, but it is difficult to argue with the facts presented. Highly recommended.] -GEG

Why the Left Promotes Racism Against White People

Tucker Carlson interviews Professor Jason Nichols of the University of Maryland about the double standard in mainstream media when it comes to race. It now is fashionable for the left to criticize white people and 'white privilege' for literally every problem and injustice imaginable. Increasingly, the Marxist narrative is that wealth and advantage among white people has come, not from productivity or creativity or self discipline or the work ethic, but from a capitalist system that exploits the working class. This narrative is an important part of the psychological conditioning of the masses – including white people – to believe that the only way to eliminate poverty and injustice is to eliminate the last vestiges of the old system of free-enterprise capitalism and replace it with socialism, communism, or some other variant of collectivism. A secondary goal of this narrative is to encourage everyone to view their racial identity as the most important aspect of their lives and, thereby, drive yet one more spear into the heart of America. The ploy is as old as warfare. It's called Divide and Conquer. -GEG