

On the One-Year Anniversary of the Las Vegas Mass Shooting, More Details Point to a Cover Up

written by GEG | October 16, 2018

The Las Vegas mass shooting that reportedly killed 58 people took place on October 1, 2017, and is still shrouded in mystery, due to secrecy, incompetence and a massive cover up. A former CIA officer with Americans for Intelligence Reform revealed more strange circumstances that have been left unexplained and un-investigated. The final official report claimed that there was no evidence that shooter Stephen Paddock colluded with anyone, however, a TSA agent at the concert witnessed suspicious activity, the door between the suites was locked, and the hard drive was missing from one of the computers. Additionally, Brian Hodges claimed he was in the room next door to Paddock's, yet he has never been questioned, despite a weird coincidence linking him to Paddock's girlfriend, Marilu Danley.
