

US Children Spend 9 Hours a Day on Computers and Cell Phones that Are Harming Their Brains

New scientific evidence shows that Big Tech is harming children who use screens on tablets, cell phones or computers for more than seven hours per day are developing different brain structures. The cortex of the brain, the outer layer that is used for organizing and planning, develops a premature thinning from prolonged exposure to screens. Neuroplasticity allows molding and shaping of the brain when exposed to certain environments for more than three hours a day, and the average American child spends nine hours a day interacting with screens. The brain grows new neural pathways and circuitry to adapt to the cyber world. The result is an increase in anxiety and depression and children as young as two years old are developing depression.

Caravan Migrants Are Endangering Children in Order to Enter US Illegally and Claim Asylum

A 19-year old Honduran woman who was eight months pregnant scaled California's flimsy border fence with her husband an 3-year old son and gave birth to an anchor baby hours later in the US. The baby will entitle her to hundreds of thousands of dollars of taxpayer-funded welfare because her son is now considered a US citizen under birthright citizenship laws.

Another woman from the caravan wriggled through a hole under the fence and her boyfriend pushed their 8-month old son through the hole to America. Last week, video captured small children being dropped over the 18-foot border wall in Arizona as six family members from Guatemala, with three children ages 2, 7 and 10, jumped the border. One of the children suffered a facial injury. In late November, caravan mothers and children were used to storm the border from Tijuana because they are sympathetic. One mother who has a 15-year old son with Down's Syndrome said that she was pressured by caravan organizers to storm the border or leave the caravan. Pueblo Sin Fronteras, a Soros-funded open borders organization is the leading organizer of the caravans.

Congress needs to change the birthright citizenship practice, cut incentives that draw migrants to the US border and deport illegal aliens instead of allowing them to stay within the US.

A Migrant mother from Honduras, along with her 15-year-old down-syndrome son, was one among many she says who were "forced" to join the migrant caravan and felt "pressured" to rush the fence at the southern U.S. border.

María Luisa Cáceres traveled from Honduras to the U.S. border with her son. She went to the El Chaparral border area in Tijuana, Mexico on November 25 to check the status of her asylum number (#1537) and was told she had to wait three weeks until she could apply.

Cáceres told The Epoch Times that organizers pressured her to rush the border fence. Cáceres said she didn't want to, "but as we are with the caravan, we are forced to."

"The truth is that we were told that if we didn't go to the caravan, then we were not with them, and you know, since we departed from Honduras, we came in a caravan," she said.

Cáceres said, "What I did yesterday was very risky, I wish it won't happen again," and blamed the aggressive men who rushed past the Mexican riot police and stormed the border. "There are people who only think about themselves, they don't think about the mothers with kids, they think about nothing," she said.

"It appears in some cases that the limited number of women and children in the caravan are being used by the organizers as 'human shields' when they confront law enforcement," Homeland Security Secretary Nielsen wrote in a Facebook post on Nov. 26. "They are being put at risk by the caravan organizers, as we saw at the Mexico–Guatemala border. This is putting vulnerable people in harm's way."

The group organizing asylum entry/numbers is Pueblo Sin Fronteras ("People Without Borders"), a George Soros-linked open-borders organization that has financially organized the transportation of several caravans of Central Americans in an attempt to get them asylum in the U.S.

Read full article here...

Boston: Newly-Elected DA, Funded by Soros, Vows to Stop Prosecuting Those Who Resist Arrest and 15 Other Crimes

Rachel Rollins, who received campaign funding from Soros-funded PACs, will take office as the district attorney for Suffolk County in January. She is planning to decline prosecution of crimes that include resisting arrest, drug possession with intent to distribute, threats, wanton or malicious destruction of property, breaking and entering vacant properties, receiving stolen property, larceny under $250, shoplifting and more. Retailers are worried their businesses will be looted and police are concerned about more violence as there will be a rise in resisting arrest. She also plans to eliminate cash bail and to stop racial disparity in who does and doesn't go to jail. Rollins' program is the new frontier in criminal justice so-called reform to cut back on mass incarceration rates. The number of victims will increase as crime has been legalized, and without any consequences, criminals will repeat their crimes.

Boston, MA – When Suffolk County's district attorney-elect Rachel Rollins takes over the prosecutor's office in January, criminals will no longer need to worry about being held accountable for many offenses – including resisting arrest.

“It’s a recipe for disaster,” veteran Boston defense attorney, Robert Griffin, told the Boston Globe.

“The problem is the message that you’re sending,” Griffin stressed. “You’re encouraging bad behavior. You’re telling people that we’re not going to do anything about this.”

Rollins, 47, has been widely hailed – and widely criticized – for her well-publicized “Charges to be Declined” list, which she has featured on her campaign webpage.

With rare exception, offenses of shoplifting, trespass, threats, and larceny under $250 will no longer be prosecuted, as well as disturbing the peace, disorderly conduct, and “minor driving offenses,” according to the list.

Breaking and entering will not be prosecuted, as long as the perpetrator makes sure the property is vacant. Alternatively, those who commit break-ins of occupied homes because they are cold or tired, but don’t damage anything, will also be in the clear.

Offenders won’t have to worry about going to court over receiving stolen property or underage drinking, and won’t be held accountable for wanton or malicious destruction of property, either.

Making threats will also be permitted, with the exception of those related to domestic violence.

Drug possession will no longer be prosecuted in Suffolk County – even in cases where the suspect is a drug dealer.

Cases where an offender is charged with resisting arrest and nothing else will also be turned away, as well as any instances where the person resists arrest while being charged with another offense on Rollins’ “Charges to be Declined” list.

“In the exceptional circumstances where prosecution of one of these charges is warranted, the line DA must first seek permission from his or her supervisor," Rollins' website noted.

Boston Police Protection Union President Michael Leary said the district attorney-elect's changes will likely lead to an increase in Boston's crime rate, the Boston Herald reported.

"If you're doing crime, you have to be held accountable for the crimes you do," Leary argued. "If you're out there doing bad things then unfortunately jail is the answer. That's what jail is for – for people who break the law."

"The quality of life is going to go down because she's not going to prosecute these people and they are going to keep doing it," he added.

"Our job is already dangerous. Its unbelievable to think people are willing to make it more dangerous for us," Leary told WBZ. "I fear that officers will begin to see even more aggressiveness than we already face on a daily basis...if there are no consequences, offenders will figure 'why not resist?'"

Chelsea Police Chief Brian Kyes said he is especially worried about the victims who will never see justice served, the Boston Herald reported.

"Their voices need to be heard as well," Chief Kyes said.

"I don't think she's properly taking into account the cost that criminals inflict on society even for minor crimes," National District Attorney's Association President William Fitzpatrick explained. "Ignoring minor crimes leads to an increase in violent crimes."

Former U.S. President Barack Obama disagreed, and praised Rollins during a speech at the University of Illinois in September, WBZ reported.

"Do what they just did in Philadelphia and Boston, and elect state attorneys and district attorneys who are looking at issues in a new light," he said at the time.

Read full article here..