

UK: NHS Child Sex Change Clinic Chief Resigns After Disturbing Report from Staff

London: Marcus Evans, a governor with the Tavistock and Portman NHS Foundation Trust, resigned from the non-profit organization that is part of the NHS to protest the group's dismissal of allegations that the clinic was 'fast-tracking' children into gender reassignment due to intense pressure from LGBT campaigners.

Summary by JW Williams

The Tavistock Institute that has been accused of mass social engineering, was created with funding from the Rockefellers. The Tavistock and Portman NHS Foundation Trust is part of Britain's National Health Service (NHS) socialized medical system and is a non-profit corporation that provides research, treatment and training. Foundation trusts provide over half of all NHS hospital and mental health services, but are not directed by the government.

The Tavistock and Portman NHS Foundation Trust, England's flagship child sex change clinic, is trying to dismiss an internal report by its medical staff, led by Dr. Bell, that was leaked last year and warned that children are at risk of “long term damage” as they are put onto life-changing drugs as a quick fix for their psychological problems and/or autism without sufficient assessment. The push for children to change their sex comes from pressure from pro-transgender activist groups such as Mermaids UK, that lobbies to abolish a minimum age for gender-confused children to take sex change drugs that cause permanent sterility. Over the past five years, the number of children referred to the Tavistock Centre has risen from 468 to 2,519 a year, a rise of more than 400%. The health of thousands of children is at stake.

Mermaids has been accused of using intimidation and blackmail to promote fertility-compromising “treatments” for underage children – and was even ordered not to contact a family after a judge ruled a woman, who was being advised by the group, had been abusing her 7-year-old son by forcing him to live as a girl. The group is also accused of using intimidation and blackmail to promote their agenda and creating “an atmosphere of significant persecution” for the staff at the Tavistock clinic, which has failed to stand up to Mermaids. The UK National Lottery recently awarded $664,000 to Mermaids.

Nuclear Powers India and Pakistan on Brink of War

Jake Morphonios reported India and Pakistan, two enemies that are equipped with nuclear weapons, are deploying troops, tanks and military aircraft to the border region between the two countries in preparation for war. According to scientists, if India or Pakistan were to strike each other with nuclear missiles, within two weeks, the smoke from those bombs will have spread around the entire Earth, blanketing the sky and blocking out sunlight for years.

The conflict began when a Muslim terror organization group launched a bomb attack on Kashmir, killing 40 Indian paramilitary police, provoking retaliation from Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi. On February 26th, India sent fighter jets across the Kashmir 'Line of Control', to carry out attacks against a Muslim training camp about 40 miles inside of Pakistani territory. Pakistan reported the bombs were detonated in a rural area and did not kill anyone, but claims that Indian forces on the Line of Control killed four civilians. Pakistan's Prime Minister Imran Khan responded by shooting down two of India's fighter jets. Khan has now called for negotiation instead of retaliation, yet both countries are preparing for full-scale war.

Trump's Deal with North Korea Fell Apart over Denuclearization

President Trump ended his talks with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un two hours early as North Korea wanted all sanctions lifted entirely while refusing to fully remove all nukes from the country, as Kim views its nuclear arsenal as a guarantor of its security and the way it will be able to preserve its hermit kingdom.

President Donald Trump abruptly ended his talks with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un two hours early over disagreements on denuclearization in Hanoi Thursday.

The summit's abrupt end marks a disappointing conclusion to what Trump hoped would be a signature achievement and contribution to his foreign policy legacy. White House officials said before the beginning of the summit that the overarching goal of the summit was to agree upon a common definition of denuclearization.

At Trump's first June 2018 summit with the North Korean leader, the two countries signed a memorandum agreeing in principle to begin a denuclearization process.

The previous summit's main achievement was securing a cooling period in tensions between the United States and North Korea, which ratcheted up early in Trump's presidential term, but the president wanted to build upon good relations and establish concrete actions the North Koreans must take.

Leaked Facebook Documents Show Discrimination Against Conservatives and Intent to Influence Elections

A Facebook employee leaked documents to James O'Keefe at Project Veritas that shows how the tech giant discriminates against conservatives through technological means and behavior modification. The 'Troll Twilight Zone' was intended to demoralize conservatives and influence important elections.

Danny Ben-David, a software engineer, wrote "Action Deboost Live Distribution" code for Facebook that suppresses distribution of a live feed by disabling features to share the video and to shut down interactive notifications, while removing live feed boost. The system converts the live video to text and machine learning identifies certain words that trigger 'deboosting'.

Additional documents show that Seij Yamamoto, a data science manager for Facebook, aims to shut down conservative "trolls" who use memes for ridicule by targeting the language of the right. He promotes the 'Troll Twilight Zone' that drastically limits bandwidth, logs out automatically, and "magically" fails to upload comments and posts. The methods are designed to demoralize the conservative user. He wrote that his Troll Twilight Zone feature will be triggered "leading up to important elections" indicating that Facebook is influencing elections against conservatives. Yamamoto proposed regulating behavior through peer pressure and fear of social rejection by notifying the friend network when a user has been suspended from the platform.
