

Big Tech Whistleblower Fired from Pinterest After Exposing Censorship that Protects the Abortion Lobby

Former Pinterest Engineer, Eric Cochran, was fired after he exposed his former employer's censorship of pro-life group Live Action to James O'Keefe at Project Veritas. A Pinterest staff member allegedly added it to a "pornography block list," presumably as a way to censor the anti-abortion group. Live Action was banned from the platform, and YouTube removed the original interview with Cochran from Project Veritas (linked below).

Insider: Search Term "Christian" Won't Auto-Complete, Others Can't Trend, No Notifications, or Recommendations

Pinterest Blacklisted Pro-Life Group LiveAction.org, Classified as "Pornography," Cannot Link to Site

Leaked "Sensitive Terms List" Includes "bible verses" and "christian easter"

Ben Shapiro Commentary Censored in "zero tolerance moment," Slack Messages Reveal

Planned Parenthood Undercover Videos Marked as “harmful” Conspiracy

Veritas Calls On More Silicon Valley Insiders to Come Forward

BIG UPDATE: YouTube has PULLED this investigative report. A backup is available on this page.

UPDATE 1: Pinterest REACTS. LiveAction.org is no longer on their “Porn Domain Blacklist”

UPDATE 2: Pinterest REACTS AGAIN. LiveAction’s Pinterest Account has been permanently suspended.

UPDATE 3: A Pinterest spokesperson has provided a statement in response to our request for comment: “Religious content is allowed on Pinterest, and many people use our service to search for and save Pins inspired by their beliefs. To protect our users from being targeted based on personal characteristics such as their religion, we have policies in place so that ads and recommendations don’t appear alongside certain terms.”

Watch banned video and read full article here..