

Anti-Gun Protesters Shout Death Threats Outside Mitch McConnell's House

Gun-control supporters stood outside US Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's home in Kentucky on Sunday night protesting and hurling death threats at him, all the while streaming live on Facebook. In one video clip, a woman can be heard talking about stabbing McConnell in his heart. In the wake of the El Paso and Dayton shootings, Democrat lawmakers and gun-control supporters have been blasting McConnell for not calling a Senate vote on a gun-control bill that was passed by the Democrat-controlled House in February. -GEG

Gun control supporters stood outside Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's home in Kentucky on Sunday night – protesting and hurling death threats at him – while broadcasting on Facebook Live.

“Murder Turtle!” the demonstrators can be heard shouting on video, in reference to McConnell's infamous nickname.

“Come out, come out, wherever you are,” a person says at one point, while the others continue to yell.

“The bitch home – we keep seeing the lights go on and off,” another says. "This hoe really thought he was going to get ready to be at home after he hurt his little punk ass shoulder. Bitch, don't nobody give a f-k! F-k your thoughts and prayers, Mitch. F-k you, f-k your wife, f-k everything you stand for. "

The "emergency protest," as the demonstrators described it, took place Sunday night while McConnell, 77, reportedly was home recovering from a broken shoulder after a fall he suffered. About 20 to 30 people attended.

Louisville metro police confirmed that the group was outside the senator's residence, telling The Post they were "protesting peacefully."

"We are assisting Capitol Police," a spokesman said.

The department was unaware, however, of the threats being made on the 2-hour FB Live video.

Read full article here...

Joaquín Castro Doxxed Trump Donors and Their Employers, Exposing Them to Unhinged

Leftists, to Intimidate Future Contributors

Democrat Texas Representative Joaquin Castro, who chairs the presidential campaign of his twin brother Julian, tweeted the names and employers of 44 San Antonio residents and businesses who maxed out their donations to President Donald Trump's reelection campaign. The cap on donations from individuals is $2,800, so the list targets affluent citizens, not millionaires. The congressman claims he is targeting voters who "are fueling a campaign of hate that labels Hispanic immigrants as 'invaders.'" -GEG

On Tuesday, Democratic Texas Rep. Joaquin Castro, who chairs the presidential campaign of his twin brother Julian, tweeted the names and employers of more than 40 San Antonians who maxed out their donations to President Donald Trump's reelection campaign.

Mind you, the federal maximum is $2,800 per individual, so we're not talking about nefarious millionaires and billionaires or political activists or public figures. The congressman doxed a bunch of regular citizens whose only sin was displeasing Castro.

The congressman claims he is targeting voters who “are fueling a campaign of hate that labels Hispanic immigrants as ‘invaders.’” First of all, if Castro disagrees with his fellow Texans on whether illegal immigrants are “invaders,” he is free to try to change their minds. Instead he decided to sic every unhinged progressive activist in Texas on these businesses, which, one imagines, employ and serve plenty of people in his community.

Then again, Castro has no clue if these individuals support Trump’s rhetoric on immigration or even if they support his position on the borders. Maybe some of his victims maxed out because they’re happy with the unemployment rate or like GOP’s tax policy. Or maybe they see the election as a binary choice and prefer a demagogic president to a leftist congressman who feels comfortable doxing his own constituents? Who knows?

Not that it matters. I may believe that Castro is a lightweight authoritarian, it still doesn’t mean I should post his family’s business addresses on Twitter.

Many Democrats like Castro have adopted a political zealotry that rationalizes basically any tactic they deem is necessary to fight Trump. This, I guess, now includes intimidation. That’s because the purpose of tweeting these names wasn't merely to bully those who have already donated to Trump, but to warn anyone in his district thinking about contributing to Trump to consider the potential retaliatory public attacks on their businesses (or worse.)

Read full article here...

The Owner of 8chan Says the Manifesto Was NOT Uploaded by the El Paso Walmart Shooter

Jim Watkins, owner of the anonymous message board 8chan, says that the manifesto attributed to the El Paso Walmart shooter, was posted to 8chan by someone other than the shooter. He said, "I don't know if he wrote it or not, but it was not uploaded by the murderer. That is clear, and law enforcement was made aware of this before most people had even heard the horrific news." -GEG

The owner of the anonymous message board 8Chan, Jim Watkins, has unequivocally stated that the manifesto which was said to have been posted by the El Paso Walmart shooter on his website was not actually posted by the killer.

Just moments before the deadly shooting in El Paso on Saturday, a sinister four page long manifesto was posted to 8Chan by someone who claimed to be the shooter.

However, Watkins, an Army veteran, asserted that the shooter actually posted on Instagram prior to the attack – and whoever uploaded the manifesto to 8Chan was not the person who committed the heinous act.

“First of all, the El Paso shooter posted on Instagram, not 8Chan. Later, someone uploaded a manifesto. However, that manifesto was not uploaded by the Walmart shooter,” Watkins asserted in his video statement. “I don’t know if he wrote it or not, but it was not uploaded by the murderer. That is clear, and law enforcement was made aware of this before most people had even heard the horrific news.”

Read full article here...

AOC's Chief of Staff, Saikat Chakrabarti, Has Come under Investigation for Possible Illegal Handling of more than $1-million in Campaign Donations – And He Has Resigned

Saikat Chakrabarti, the mastermind behind Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's campaign and proposed Green New Deal, resigned as her chief of staff last week at the same time as coming under federal investigation. Two PACs are being probed, Brand New Congress and Justice Democrats, both set up by Chakrabarti to support Marxist candidates across the country. More than $1-million in political donations was funneled into two private companies that Chakrabarti also incorporated and controlled. Both companies had similar names to the PACs. While PACs must follow stringent federal rules on disclosure of spending and fundraising, private companies are not subject to the same transparency. The $5,000 limit on contributions from PACs to candidates may have been violated. -GEG

The feds are looking into possible campaign finance misdeeds by Rep.

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's chief of staff and lead rainmaker, who suddenly resigned Friday, federal sources told The Post.

The inquiry centers on two political action committees founded by Saikat Chakrabarti, the top aide who quit along with Ocasio-Cortez spokesman Corbin Trent, the sources said. Trent left to join the congresswoman's 2020 re-election campaign.

The brash Chakrabarti, who masterminded Ocasio-Cortez's campaign and steered her proposed Green New Deal, had caused uproar in the halls of Congress with a series of combative tweets that contributed to a rift between his rookie boss and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi.

"People were not happy that he used his Twitter account to comment about members and the bills that he and his boss oppose," a senior House Democratic staffer said. "There was a series of colliding and cascading grievances."

The two PACs being probed, Brand New Congress and Justice Democrats, were both set up by Chakrabarti to support progressive candidates across the country.

But they funneled more than $1 million in political donations into two private companies that Chakrabarti also incorporated and controlled, according to Federal Election Commission filings and a complaint filed in March with the regulatory agency.

In 2016 and 2017, the PACs raised about $3.3 million, mostly from small donors. A third of the cash was transferred to two private companies whose names are similar to one of the PACs – Brand New Congress LLC and Brand New Campaign LLC – federal campaign filings show.

Read full article here...

Politicians Attempt to Use Mass Shootings to Win Votes While Ignoring Deeper Issues

Tucker Carlson comments on Democrat presidential candidates using recent shootings to condemn Donald Trump, “white supremacy”, and guns. They ignore deeper problems such as a decaying culture that lacks purpose. Young men now exist without communities, no fathers, no mentors, no instruction in useful trades, no productive activities, no opportunities for love and affection, and no way out. Suicide rates are the highest ever measured, millions are dependent on drugs, and 15% of millennials still live at home with their parents. Less than half of those between 25 and 34 are married, and a high proportion are not in any relationship at all. They feel helpless, miserable and alone. The American culture has been killed by its enemies.

70% of mass shooters show signs of mental illness. A former FBI profiler suggests that involuntary celibacy also is a contributing factor. [We are disappointed that this FBI expert makes no mention that almost all mass shooters are on prescription psychoactive drugs at the time of their rampages. These drugs carry warnings that side effects include impulses for homicide and suicide! We believe these drugs are the number-one cause of mass shootings.] -GEG

Media Creates Impression That All Mass Shooters Are White Males, But New York Times Disclosed in 2016 that 75% of Shooters Were Black

A New York Times article from 2016 was based on a study of 358 mass shootings, defined as involving at least four victims, found that “nearly three-fourths of victims and suspected assailants whose race could be identified were black.” [This does not mean that black people are more violent than other races, but it does mean that media portrayal of white people as such is not based on fact. Violence is an individual personality trait or cultural norm, not a racial trait.] -GEG

<https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2019/08/photos-every-us-mass-shooter-in-2019-who-shot-four-or-more-people/>

NY Times article from 2016:

After the slaughter of nine worshipers at a South Carolina church last June, but before the massacre of eight students and a teacher at an Oregon community college in October, there was a shooting that the police here have labeled Incident 159022597.01. It happened on a clear Friday night at an Elks Lodge, on a modest block of clapboard houses northeast of this city's hilly downtown. Unlike the butchery that bookended it, it merited no presidential statements, no saturation television coverage.

But

what took place at 6101 Prentice Street on Aug. 21 may say more about the nature of gun violence in the United States than any of those far more famous rampages. It is a snapshot of a different sort of mass violence – one that erupts with such anesthetic regularity that it is rendered almost invisible, except to the mostly black victims, survivors and attackers.

According to the police account, more than 30 people had gathered in the paneled basement bar of the lodge to mark the 39th birthday of a man named Greg Wallace when a former neighbor, Timothy Murphy, showed up, drunk. Fists flew. Mr. Murphy ducked out the door, burst back in with a handgun, and opened fire.

As

partygoers scrambled for the door, he chased Greg Wallace's younger brother Dawaun to a tiny black-and-white-tiled bathroom, where he shot him nine times before the violence spilled out onto the street. There, another Wallace relative, also armed with a handgun, fired back at him.

By

the end, 27 bullets had flown, hitting seven people: Mr. Murphy, who died; Dawaun Wallace, who was grievously wounded; four bystanders, one of whom was hit in the genitals, another in the leg.

And Barry Washington.

A

seasonal packer for Amazon.com, Mr. Washington, 56, had stopped at the lodge on his way to the store for cigarettes, said his sister, Jaci

Washington. He was in the bathroom when Mr. Murphy cornered Dawaun Wallace there. A single bullet pierced Mr. Washington's arm, then his heart.

He left behind a son, a daughter, a brother, a sister, a mother and four grandchildren.

"My

brother died on the floor of a bathroom for no reason," Ms. Washington said. "He had nothing to do with the whole situation. I can't believe I lost my brother like this."

Yet many in the neighborhood where they grew up, she said, responded with a shrug. "The reality is, this happens quite frequently," she said. "And it's kind of, 'Oh, well, this guy was killed today. Somebody else will be killed tomorrow.' "

That is more than correct. The Elks Lodge episode was one of at least 358 armed encounters nationwide last year – nearly one a day, on average – in which four or more people were killed or wounded, including attackers. The toll: 462 dead and 1,330 injured, sometimes for life, typically in bursts of gunfire lasting but seconds.

In some cities, law enforcement officials say a growing share of shootings involve more than one victim, possibly driven by increased violence between street gangs. But data are scarce.

Seeking deeper insight into the phenomenon, The New York Times identified and analyzed these 358 shootings with four or more casualties, drawing on two databases assembled from news reports and citizen contributors, and then verifying details with law enforcement agencies.

Only a small handful were high-profile mass shootings like those in South Carolina and Oregon. The rest are a pencil sketch of everyday America at its most violent.

They chronicle how easily lives are shattered when a firearm is readily available – in a waistband, a glove compartment, a mailbox or garbage can that serves as a gang's gun locker. They document the mayhem spawned by the most banal of offenses: a push in a bar, a Facebook taunt, the wrong choice of music at a house party. They tally scores of unfortunates in the wrong place at the wrong time: an 11-month-old clinging to his mother's hip, shot as she prepared to load him into a car; a 77-year-old church deacon, killed by a stray bullet while watching television on his couch.

The

shootings took place everywhere, but mostly outdoors: at neighborhood barbecues, family reunions, music festivals, basketball tournaments, movie theaters, housing project courtyards, Sweet 16 parties, public parks. Where motives could be gleaned, roughly half involved or suggested crime or gang activity. Arguments that spun out of control accounted for most other shootings, followed by acts of domestic violence.

The

typical victim was a man between 18 and 30, but more than 1 in 10 were 17 or younger. Less is known about those who pulled the triggers because nearly half of the cases remain unsolved. But of those arrested or identified as suspects, the average age was 27.

Most of the shootings occurred in economically downtrodden neighborhoods.

These shootings, by and large, are not a middle-class phenomenon.

The
divide is racial as well. Among the cases examined by The Times were 39
domestic violence shootings, and they largely involved white attackers and victims. So did many of the high-profile massacres, including a wild shootout between Texas biker gangs that left nine people dead and 18 wounded.

Over all, though, nearly three-fourths of victims and suspected assailants whose race could be identified were black. Some experts suggest that helps explain why the drumbeat of dead and wounded does not inspire more outrage.

Read full article here...

Cloudflare Drops 8chan for Posting Alleged El Paso Shooter Manifesto. FBI Caught Covertly Posting on 8chan in June.

On Saturday, a manifesto attributed to Patrick Crusius, the alleged El Paso shooter, was posted on 8chan, an image board where anyone can post images or content, and is known to be politically incorrect, with no monitoring from site administration. Cloudflare, a system that protects websites from cyber attacks, dropped 8chan and blamed the website for “inspiring” mass murder.

Apparently, the FBI is also posting on 8chan, which was discovered earlier this summer after an application for a search warrant for 8chan was unsealed, revealing that a federal agent , FBI Special Agent Michael J. Rod, was trolling the site, and trying to redirect blame for the April 27th synagogue shooting toward the Russian government, and away from the users’ conspiracy theories against the CIA or Mossad. [Hey, the FBI is supposed to investigate criminal activity, not initiate it.] -GEG

On Saturday the El Paso mass murderer posted a “manifesto” on 8Chan and then went off and murdered 20 at a Walmart.

On Monday Cloudflare Blog terminated service with 8Chan. Cloudflare also blamed the website for “inspiring” the mass murderer.

This is where we are today with hard left activists running all of our internet properties.

Read full article here...

FBI agent accidentally reveals own 8chan posts; attempts to redirect white supremacist rage against Russia

The unsealing of an application for a search warrant by the federal government on 8chan’s servers has unintentionally revealed that a federal agent has been trolling the site and attempting to redirect the users’ conspiracy theories against the Russian government instead of the CIA or Mossad.

The legal case stems from the April 27th shooting at a California synagogue by white supremacist and 8chan user John Earnest. The day of the shooting, Earnest is believed to have posted to 8chan a link to an anti-Semitic Pastebin manifesto and a not-so-cryptic suggestion that he was about to commit a murderous act of violence to back up his beliefs.

In the accompanying affidavit to the search warrant application, FBI Special Agent Michael J. Rod requests the “IP address and metadata information about Earnest’s original posting and the postings of all of the individuals who responded to the subject posting and/or commented

about it. Additionally, agents seek information about any other posting coming from the IP address used by Earnest to post the subject posting.”

Read full article here...

Additional sources:

<http://archive.is/hP7qN>

Senator Rand Paul Had Part of His Lung Removed Due to Complications from the 2017 Attack by His Neighbor

Senator Rand Paul announced that he underwent surgery to have a portion of his lung removed, a lingering result of a 2017 violent assault by his next door neighbor, Rene Boucher, who tackled him from behind. Paul suffered six broken ribs in the attack and contracted pneumonia. Earlier this year, he had another surgical procedure to treat a hernia related to the attack. Boucher previously pleaded guilty to assaulting a member of Congress, a federal offense, and was ordered to pay a $10,000 fine and sentenced to 30 days in jail. In a separate lawsuit, a jury ordered Boucher to pay $580,000 in damages and medical expenses. -GEG

Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) revealed on Monday that he recently underwent surgery to remove a portion of his lung that was injured after his neighbor assaulted him at his home two years ago.

“Unfortunately, I will have to limit my August activities. Part of my lung damaged by the 2017 assault had to be removed by surgery this weekend,” Paul said. “The doctors, nurses, [and] staff at Vanderbilt University Medical Center were great. I should be able to return to the Senate in September.”

*Unfortunately,
I will have to limit my August activities. Part of my lung damaged by the 2017 assault had to be removed by surgery this weekend.
The doctors, nurses, & staff at Vanderbilt University Medical Center were great.
I should be able to return to the Senate in September –
Senator Rand Paul (@RandPaul) August 5, 2019*

The Kentucky senator told police that his neighbor “came onto his property and tackled him from behind, forcing him to the ground and causing pain.” The attack left him with six broken ribs, pleural effusion, and, consequently, pneumonia.

Rene

Boucher, 59, was arrested in November 2017 after he attacked Paul outside his Bowling Green, Kentucky home. He was reportedly upset after Paul blew some leaves onto his property with his lawnmower.

The judge presiding over the case referred to the attack as a “dispute between neighbors” and denied that it was politically motivated.

Boucher

ultimately pleaded guilty to assaulting a member of Congress resulting in personal injury. He was subsequently sentenced to 30 days in prison, a year of supervised release, and required to serve 100 hours of community service for the attack. Paul was further rewarded more than $580,000 in damages and medical expenses.

The news comes only a week after Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) faced widespread backlash for circulating a tweet that appeared to celebrate the violent attack.

Omar retweeted actor and outspoken leftist Tom Arnold on July 29

after he wrote on Twitter: “Imagine being Rand Paul’s next door neighbor and having to deal with [Rand Paul] lying cowardly circular whiney bullcrap about lawn clippings. No wonder he ripped his toupee off.”

Wow, it appears @IlhanMN is celebrating/calling for violence against @RandPaul.

I hope every Democrat and Republican in Congress, as well as members of the media have the courage to call this out.

Calls for political violence should never be tolerated, regardless of Party. pic.twitter.com/AQcz5ggLI6 – Andrew Surabian (@Surabees) July 29, 2019

Leading up to Omar seemingly promoting the attack, Paul had expressed his discontent with the freshman congresswoman's frequent criticism of the country that has provided her so much since she arrived as a refugee fleeing from Somalia.

"I've met people who have come here from behind the Iron Curtain. They got away from communism, they're some of the best Americans we have because they really appreciate how great our country is," Paul said at the time. "Then I hear Representative Omar say America is a terrible place – well, she came here and we fed her, we clothed her, she got welfare, she got [schooling], she got healthcare, and then lo and behold, she has the honor of actually winning a seat in Congress."

Read full article here...