

Minneapolis: A Gang of Young Black Men Were Caught on Camera Severely Beating and Robbing a White Man

Police in Minneapolis have arrested more than a dozen suspected gang members accused of preying on drunk people and robbing them of their cellphones and valuables. One of the incidents was captured on surveillance video that shows a gang of about 12 young men stealing a white man's cell phone and wallet, beating him, stomping on him, riding a bicycle over him, stripping him, and finally throwing a potted plant at him. CityPages reported that robberies are up 53% this year in central downtown Minneapolis and, in one 20-day stretch, 47 people were attacked, most of them by pack hunters. -GEG

Are we going to have a national conversation about these horrific racial attacks in Minneapolis?

From The Daily Mail:

Police in Minneapolis have arrested more than a dozen suspected gang members, some as young as 13, accused of preying on drunk people and robbing them of their cellphones and valuables in a series of violent attacks.

One of the incidents took place on August 3 at the Target Field plaza and was captured on surveillance video.

The graphic recording shows a gaggle of about 12 teenagers and young men surround two men playing a game of dice on the sidewalk.

About 40 seconds into the video, one of the ruffians appears to snatch a man's cellphone. The victim shows resistance, prompting one of the attackers to throw the first punch.

[...] Towards the end of the footage, one of the most aggressive attackers, who is dressed in a light-blue shirt, hurls a potted plant at the victim, before another youth runs him over with a bicycle.

[...] Then on September 6, police recognized one of the suspects from the video and arrested him.

Boris Likuwa Lusambo, 20, allegedly admitted that it was him in the footage taking part in the violent robbery. He has been charged with first-degree aggravated robbery and faces up to 20 years in prison, if convicted.
