Holland: A family, including a father and five children, age 18 to 25, was discovered living in the cellar of an isolated farmhouse, because they were expecting the “end of time” to occur. Authorities in the Netherlands have opened an investigation after a family was found living isolated in a cellar because they were expecting the “end of time” to occur.

Officials became involved when the parents of a family living in the cellar of an isolated farmhouse near the town of Ruinerwold were flagged for not sending their children to school.

The police were called to the home after a young member of the family was found wandering “confused” and “unkempt” outside a pub in Ruinerwold. The young man was said to have “never been to school.”

“He said he needed help and wanted to put an end to the situation he was in,” Chris Westerbeek, the pub’s owner, told the the Dutch news outlet, Dagblad Noorden.

Westerbeek added that the young man snuck out of the home in the middle of the night because he was closely watched during the day.

When police arrived at the farmhouse, they discovered a secret staircase hidden behind a cupboard in the living room that led them to the living space underneath the house.

Authorities discovered that the family had been living in the “enclosed space” for up to seven years and were cloistered there because they expected a cataclysm to befall the world.

Advocating for Communism

Communist policies that already are ravaging America include a state-controlled banking monopoly, a progressive income tax, and 'free' government schools. Democrats now are reviving other planks of the Communist Manifesto including Bernie Sanders' proposal for an 77% inheritance tax. Marianne Williamson and Pete Buttigeig have proposed one-year mandatory national service for all young people. Elizabeth Warren is calling for a steep 'wealth tax'. The comrades are having a field day.

171 years ago, the Communist Manifesto was first published.

Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels filled the book with bold new ideas for how the working proletariat could rise up against the monied bourgeoisie.

At one point in the text, they write a check-list of the top ten goals of the communists.

This list included things like free public education, a progressive income tax, and a state-owned central banking monopoly.

That's all been accomplished of course.

Then there are a few other goals which you might recognize as coming back into fashion these days.

For instance, Marx's platform includes the "abolition of all rights of inheritance."

Marx also advocated "Equal liability of all to labour. Establishment of industrial armies, especially for agriculture."

And number one on Marx's top ten checklist was "Abolition of property in land and application of all rents of land to public purposes.”

Marx would fit right in running for President amongst the current crowded field of “democratic socialists” clamoring to one-up each other with the most communist platform.

For instance, Bernie Sanders’ platform includes a top estate tax—aka inheritance or death tax—of 77%.

But that’s far from the only stale old idea Bernie Sanders has dug up.

Last month he announced his plan to overhaul housing and make it more affordable. This includes a 25% house-flipping tax. That, apparently to punish the people who buy crappy houses, fix them up, and sell them for a profit.

You already pay property taxes on land, which means it’s not really yours, you’re renting it from the government.

But now they think you should pay even more if you’re improving that property to sell. And Sanders wants an additional “empty homes tax” of 2% on the total value of vacant houses.

Marianne Williamson and Pete Buttigieg have both proposed one year mandatory national service for young people.

Bill “your money’s in the wrong hands” de Blasio dropped out of the Presidential race, and went back to NYC where he’ll continue raising taxes on the people who have the nerve to invest millions of dollars in New York City property.

The wealth tax, proposed by Elizabeth Warren, was abandoned by Sweden after it didn’t work.

Virtually all the candidates are peddling some expansion of free education, whether it is giving away free college or erasing student debt. They all want the income tax to be even more progressive, with top rates of 70%+.

Current Presidential candidates aren't proposing bold new ideas. They are rehashing old failed communist ideas.

But it's not just communist theory that's the problem. Countries have already tried putting the Communist Manifesto into practice.

Abolishing inheritance of property was actually one of the first things the Bolsheviks did in 1918 shortly after they came to power in Russia.

This, along with other policies to weaken the family, quickly created millions of homeless children.
