

Democrats May Give as Many as 1 Million Non-Citizens May Voting Rights in New York City

Democrat city council members are considering legislation that allows eligible legal immigrants to vote in citywide elections, similar to San Francisco, California, policy where non-citizens are allowed to vote in local school board elections. The law would give local electoral power to the city's massive 3.1 million foreign-born population, making up almost 40% of the total city population. The majority of the city's foreign-born population has arrived from the Dominican Republic, China, Mexico, Jamaica, Guyana, Ecuador, and Haiti, Trinidad and Tobago, Bangladesh, and India. Nearly 50% of the population of NYC is not proficient in English.

NY State lawmakers are pushing a measure that would automatically register to vote all eligible state residents who apply for driver's licenses unless they check an "opt-out" box.

Up to one million non-citizens living in New York City may obtain voting rights for local elections if a plan by Democrat city councilmembers is approved.

As Breitbart News reported, Democrat city councilmembers are considering legislation that allows eligible legal immigrants to vote in citywide elections – similar to San Francisco,

California, policy where non-citizens are allowed to vote in local school board elections.

Anywhere between 500,000 to one million non-citizens in New York City would be granted the right to vote in local elections if the legislation is approved by the city's 51-member city council, sources told the New York Daily News.

Pushing the legislation is Councilman Ydanis Rodriguez (D-Manhattan) along with 22 other Democrat councilmembers and the city's Public Advocate Jumaane Williams.

The law would give local electoral power to the city's massive 3.1 million foreign-born population – making up almost 40 percent of the total city population. The majority of the city's foreign-born population has arrived from the Dominican Republic, China, Mexico, Jamaica, Guyana, Ecuador, and Haiti, Trinidad and Tobago, Bangladesh, and India.

More than half of New York City's foreign-born population speaks either Spanish or Chinese, and nearly 50 percent of the total foreign-born population is effectively nonproficient in English.

Read full article here...