

The US Center for Disease Control (CDC) Begins Testing Americans for the Coronavirus—But How Reliable Are the Tests?

Rappoport says the two most prevalent tests are the antibody test and PCR, and that both are inaccurate because they fail to address whether the germ is the cause of the illness, or if the body has been successful in fighting off the virus, or if there is enough of the virus in the body to cause illness.