President Trump announced that he and First Lady Melania Trump have tested positive for Covid-19 after staffer Hope Hicks tested positive. An unidentified White House official said that the president was experiencing mild symptoms but was working from the White House residence. The First Lady tweeted on Thursday night that they both were feeling good. Trump's physician said that the couple "are both well at this time". Neither the PCR test nor the antibody test actually test for a virus and are extremely inaccurate, producing high levels of false positive results. The New York Times estimated that 90% of positive Covid-19 test results are really negative.

"Tonight, @FLOTUS and I tested positive for COVID-19. We will begin our quarantine and recovery process immediately," Trump tweeted just before 1 a.m. "We will get through this TOGETHER!"

Vice President Mike Pence tested negative for the virus on Friday morning and "remains in good health," his spokesman said.

Many White House and senior administration officials were undergoing tests Friday, but the full scale of the outbreak around the president may not be known for some time as it can take days for an infection to be detectable by a test.

Officials with the White House Medical Unit were still in the process of tracing the president's contacts, the official said.

Trump was considering how he might address the nation or otherwise communicate with the American people Friday, the official added.

Trump was last seen by reporters returning to the White House on Thursday evening and did not appear visibly ill. He is 74 years old and clinically obese, putting him at higher risk of serious complications from a virus that has infected more than 7 million people nationwide."

The president's physician said in a memo that Trump and the first lady, who is 50, "are both well at this time" and "plan to remain at home within the White House during their convalescence."

The CDC Has Stopped Evictions, At Least Until the End of the Year. Big Players Will Benefit.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, operating under the US Department of Health and Human Services, assumed jurisdiction over private residential leases nationwide and has curtailed evictions until at least the end of the year. The CDC's new directive threatens federal criminal penalties against landlords who ignore the ban that include up to $500,000 in fines and one year in jail. Over time, this eviction moratorium will create a lot of distressed properties for landlords that cannot pay their mortgages.

The CDC is essentially voiding contracts by allowing one party to stop performing, and blocking the other party from suing for non performance, radically altering the bargaining power of the parties. When contracts are not enforceable, each transaction has a much higher risk.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, operating under the US Department of Health and Human Services, has asserted jurisdiction over private residential leases nationwide. It intends to curtail evictions until at least the end of the year, and in fact its new directive threatens federal criminal penalties against landlords who ignore tenant "declarations" made using CDC forms.

As Jeff Deist put it, "This is astonishing, even by 2020 standards."

Salim Furth, a senior research fellow at the Mercatus Center at George Mason University, notes that landlords don't want vacancies so they've largely been working things out with tenants during the first few months of the pandemic.

Free markets work.

But now we have the heavy hand of government setting the rules.

Who the hell is going to want to be a landlord in this kind of environment?

Deist again:

The fallout from suspending rental contracts will be deep and long lasting. Many landlords will find their situations untenable and stop making mortgage and property tax payments. New rental housing stock will be depressed, as owners worry about the next suspension of rent payments now that the precedent has been set. After all, why wouldn't moratoriums happen again when the next pandemic or financial crisis hits? Rental housing units will drop in price as more landlords abandon the business—setting the stage for commercial and private equity buyers to grab units on the cheap from individuals and small owners. Ultimately, foreclosures, evictions, and tax sales will happen no matter what the federal government does. The likely outcome is bigger players owning more and more of the rental housing stock, consolidating the permanent renter class and adding to the rootlessness many Americans feel. Even the most modest home ownership creates skin in the game and encourages better neighborhoods, while areas dominated by rentals lack the same incentives for improvement. And the new owners of rental units will pass all the uncertainty, risks, and potential losses on to millions of Americans in the form of higher rents.

And you guessed it, the blunt instrument of government edicts will result in other madness.

Todd Drake, small property owner, Empire Real Estate Management, LLC in Albany, NY tells WRGB News of the problems he is already having because of the New York state eviction moratorium:

No matter what they do, there is nothing we can do. The police can't help us. The courts won't help us, and the New York State government won't help us. We had somebody in the building that invited another person to live with him and was not on the lease. She began- I think she uses substances or has mental health issues – she began smearing feces all over the walls in common areas. The other residents were appalled. I have moms that scared to be on the property because the next-door neighbor can't be evicted.

And to Deist's point about apartments falling into the hands of bigger operators, Bloomberg reports:

Daniel Kattan, co-founder and managing partner of PIA Residential, a private equity real estate firm based in Miami, says that corporate landlords are not likely to suffer under the moratorium, because institutional investors are better equipped to weather a short-term downturn...“In the long term, this eviction moratorium will, unfortunately, create a lot of distressed properties for landlords that cannot pay their mortgages,” Kattan says. “For us, it will be an opportunity to buy more.”

The CDC regulation calls for landlords who violate the ban to be subject to penalties ranging from $100,000 to $500,000 in fines and one year in jail.

“Housing advocates” are planning to guide renters in filling out the CDC forms that will help them certify that they've lost income or suffered extraordinary medical expenses and that eviction would put them on streets.

Biden Says Antifa “Just an Idea,” Yet Antifa.com Website Takes You to ‘Biden for President’ Donation Page

Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden defended Antifa, the far-left anarchist movement, refusing to acknowledge that the radical left is responsible for violence and rioting in Democrat cities and said white supremacists pose a greater danger to the country. Biden said that Antifa is “an idea, not an organization.” Curiously, the Antifa.com website redirects to Joe Biden’s campaign donation page.

Trump Introduces $500-Billion 'Platinum Plan' for the Black Community

President Trump unveiled his 'Platinum Plan' which will provide jobs for the black community and also designate the KKK and Antifa as terrorist groups. Trump's spokesperson said that Trump wants to prosecute the KKK as domestic terrorists and make lynching a federal crime. In the debate, Trump acknowledged that the violence was coming from left-wing groups, but Biden was not asked to disavow Antifa. Trump promised to increase access to $500-billion in capital to fund his Black Economic Empowerment 'Platinum Plan' that aims to create three-million new jobs for the black community and to open 500,000 new Black-owned businesses. He also wants to expand on a national clemency project that has released many criminals from prison early. [All of these proposals are right out of the Marxist-Leninist play book. The non-violent path to Communism is the legislative and government-funding path that creates Communism while calling it something else such as socialism or empowerment. Some people see this as Trump trying to buy the black vote. Others see it as betrayal of his supporters. Communism is the result either way.] -GEG

US President Donald Trump rolled out Friday his plan to free up roughly $500 billion in capital for Black communities as he seeks to court the bloc ahead of November's national election.

Addressing supporters in Atlanta, Georgia Trump continued his broadside against Democrats saying they have "taken Black voters for granted," and claimed that during his first term in office he has done more for Black Americans "than Joe Biden did in 47 years."

Trump said his plan would "deliver more opportunity, more security, more fairness and more prosperity to Black communities."

"If you vote Republican, over the next four years we will create three million new jobs for the Black community, open 500,000 new Black-owned businesses, increase access to capital in Black communities by $500 billion," he said, maintaining his plan would also have the "highest standards for policing."

Australian State Law Empowers Officials to Forcibly Remove Underwear to Administer Vaccine

In 2016, the state of Western Australia's Public Health Act added regulations authorizing officers to restrain individuals and, if necessary, forcibly "remove anything (including underwear) that the relevant person is wearing." The powers are only enforceable under a public health state of emergency, as was declared in Western Australia in March 2020 in response to fear of a COVID-19 pandemic. An Australian law professor says the government should have declared the emergency over months ago, "but of course they will not now relinquish these newfound powers." Australian Prime Minister Scott Morrison made an agreement with a vaccine manufacturer and announced that the vaccine will be made "as mandatory as you can possibly make it" before quickly walking back the comments somewhat and saying the vaccine "is not going to be compulsory" and that "we can't hold someone down and make them take it." [Oh yes they can – and they intend to do exactly that.]_GEG

The state of Western Australia has legislated to allow police officers or other “authorised officers” to restrain individuals and, if deemed necessary, forcibly remove their underwear in order to administer a vaccine.

LifeSiteNews recently became aware of the legislation and is in communication with a number of residents of Western Australia who, until recently, were unaware of the extraordinary powers granted to the government in state law.

The so-called “reasonable force” includes the powers to:

(a) to apprehend and detain the person to whom the direction applies (the relevant person) and take the relevant person to a place where the person is required to undergo medical observation, medical examination or medical treatment or to be vaccinated in accordance with the direction; and

(b) to detain the relevant person at the place where he or she is required to undergo medical observation, medical examination or medical treatment or to be vaccinated in accordance with the direction; and

(c) to restrain the relevant person –

(i) to enable a medical observation, medical examination or medical treatment to be carried out; or

(ii) to enable the relevant person to be vaccinated;

(d) to remove anything (including underwear) that the relevant person is wearing, if –

(i) the removal of the thing is reasonably necessary to enable a medical examination or medical treatment to be carried out or, as the case requires, to enable the person to be vaccinated; and

(ii) the relevant person is given a reasonable opportunity to remove the thing himself or herself, and refuses or fails to do so.

On the Western Australia government website showing “Original Acts as passed” for Western Australian legislation, the text is included in the original 2016 Public Health Act. An updated version of the act as of September 12, 2020 is also available on the government website and includes the same text.

An Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) “fact check” article on the issue was published in June this year when some social media–users first became aware of the legislation and raised alarm online.

The ABC article states that “[t]hese powers are only enforceable under a public health state of emergency, as was declared in Western Australia on 23 March 2020, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.”

Dr. Rocco Loiacono, senior lecturer at the Curtin Law School in Western Australia, told LifeSiteNews that “there is no basis for any public health emergency since there has not been any community transmission of the virus in WA since early April!”

“The government should have declared the emergency over months ago,” Loiacono said, “but of course they will not now relinquish these newfound powers.”
