

NYT: 2 Alaska Healthcare Workers Given Emergency Treatment After Taking Pfizer's COVID-19 Vaccine

written by GEG | December 18, 2020

After taking Pfizer's experimental mRNA Covid-19 vaccine, one worker at Bartlett Regional Hospital in Juneau, Alaska suffered from a potentially life-threatening allergic reaction and had to be injected with epinephrine and steroids and was also hospitalized. A second worker at the same hospital had to be taken to the ER and treated with epinephrine and other drugs. Pfizer's Covid-19 vaccine is an experimental vaccine that received emergency-use authorization, and it has not been fully tested. -GEG
