

RNA 'Vaccines' Are GMO Implants, Not Vaccines

written by GEG | January 19, 2021

15 US Code, § 41 Deceptive labeling law from the Federal Trade Commission Act that relates to advertising requires that a product or service cannot be said to prevent treat or cure human disease without substantiating the claim with scientific evidence. Furthermore, it is illegal to use terms, phrases, or words with an intent to deceive.

The 1905 Supreme Court case, Jacobson v Massachusetts, defines a vaccine as a substance that prevents infection by a pathogen and also prevents spreading it to others. Martin says Moderna, the manufacturer of a new Covid-RNA injection, describes its product not as a vaccine, but as “gene-therapy technology” in SEC filings. This is because neither Moderna or Pfizer (the other manufacturer of the injections) makes any claims about their products creating immunity or preventing transmission. The best they can offer is that it is expected to lessen symptoms. Moderna’s own clinical study says it is “impractical to measure infection.” The New England Journal of Medicine and Lancet reported that “no correlate of protection from SARS-CoV-2 has been established,” which means that there is no evidence that the injections protect against anything. Martin concludes that Moderna and Pfizer are in violation of the Federal Trade Commission’s Act, which prohibits deceptive practices.

Martin believes that gene-therapy technology is called vaccine technology in order to qualify for the 1986 liability exclusion for vaccine manufacturers. This allows drug companies to make billions without any liability or consequences when their products cause injury or death. -GEG

David Martin said that Secretary of Department of Health and Human Services Alex Azar has kept the state of emergency going, along with governors, mayors and unelected officials, in order to maintain the liability shield under the emergency use authorization rule.
