

UK Government Adviser Says Fatigue, Headache, Sore Throat and Diarrhea Should be Added to List of COVID Symptoms

UK: A government advisor from the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) said that fatigue, headache, sore throat and diarrhea should be added to the list of COVID symptoms, in order to detect a third more cases of the virus, especially in younger people. By including symptoms that are common for other illnesses such as flu, SAGE can artificially inflate the number of cases and create hysteria by claiming the country is experiencing another “wave” of COVID infections. This will likely be used to argue for further lockdowns in the winter.

A SAGE government adviser has said that fatigue, headache, sore throat and diarrhoea should be added to the list of COVID symptoms, prompting concerns that this will artificially inflate case numbers.

The London Times reports: “Including fatigue, headache, sore throat and diarrhoea on the official list of Covid symptoms would pick up a third more cases of the virus, Calum Semple, a member of the Scientific advisory group for emergencies (Sage), said.”

“As older people are vaccinated, proportionally more younger people are having the disease and they have a different group of symptoms,” Semple asserted, adding, “By extending the symptom list, we think we’ll pick up about a third more cases.”

By including symptoms that are common for other illnesses such as flu, if a third more cases are suddenly ‘discovered, SAGE can then attempt to fan the flames of hysteria by claiming the country is experiencing another “wave” of COVID infections.

Calling the idea “mission creep,” commentator Maajid Nawaz suggested that adding more symptoms to the list is an excuse to artificially boost case numbers, which will then be used to argue for further lockdowns in the winter.
