

Pfizer CEO Says There Will be 3 Booster Shots per Year and That Toddlers will be Included

written by GEG | August 30, 2021

Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla says a vaccine-resistant variant likely will emerge, and his company will be able to produce a vaccine to combat a new 'variant of concern' within 95 days after it appears. (He says nothing about knowing if it will be safe and effective, only that they will produce one.) Booster shots now are being recommended for a total of three so far this year. Pfizer released one billion doses of its Covid gene-therapy "vaccine" in the first half of 2021, and Bourla says his company will produce another two-billion doses by the end of the year. (If the profit is $45 per vial, and if four-billion shots are administered four times per year, that would be $720-billion profit per year just for this one company.) Bourla says the company is currently performing a study with vaccines on children ages 5 to 11. He added that "a little bit later we are going to do for kids below five years old." -GEG

Link for Fox News video:

<https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2021/08/pfizer-ceo-says-covid-19-vaccine-resistant-variant-likely-emerge-pharma-co-system-place-release-new-variant-specific-jab-3-months-video/>

Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla on Tuesday said a vaccine-resistant variant will likely emerge.

But don't worry because the pharma company already has a system in place to release a "variant-specific" jab within 95 days.

Two doses of the Pfizer vaccine plus a booster shot may not be enough to protect from new variants.

So we're already talking about a fourth Covid jab.

Read full article here...