

New Brunswick, Canada Allows Grocery Stores to Ban Unvaccinated People

written by GEG | December 5, 2021

The government of New Brunswick announced its Covid-19 'Winter Action Plan' that gives all businesses, including grocery stores, the option of requiring proof of vaccination from all patrons. The plan fails to instruct on how unvaccinated people may acquire food if they are denied entry into markets. The plan can impose further restrictions, if necessary, on private gatherings and the shutting down of all "non-essential" businesses.

The New Brunswick government has released its 'Winter Action Plan' for COVID-19, featuring a host of new public health restrictions for residents of the province.

Health Minister Dorothy Shephard announced a three-level plan that will go into effect on Saturday and remain at least until the spring, citing a "very concerning" rise in COVID-19 infections over the past two weeks.

As a part of the province's plan, all businesses – including grocery stores – will have the option of requiring proof of vaccination from all patrons.
