

CDC Chief Finally Admits Vast Majority of Covid Deaths Had Four or More Comorbidities!

written by GEG | January 11, 2022

CDC data shows that 75% of the people who were recorded as dying from Covid-19 actually had four or more comorbidities, which are additional medical conditions. Dr. Scott Atlas, former Coronavirus advisor to Trump, said that nearly two-thirds of Covid-19 deaths were individuals with at least six comorbidities! This indicates that the people who were reported to have died from Covid-19 were already very ill and that the comorbidities were responsible for their plight.

Tucker Carlson reported that Covid-19 was listed as the cause of death for nearly 30,000 cases of sepsis, 784 HIV cases, many drug overdoses and one person who was struck by lightning.

In related news, New York Governor Hochul reported that nearly half of the patients in New York hospitals with a diagnosis of Covid-19 are in the hospital for another reason and just happened to test positive for Covid-19.

On Monday, CDC Director Rochelle Walensky finally admitted that an “overwhelming” number of Covid deaths that have been recorded in the US were individuals with multiple comorbidities which were a main contributing factor in their deaths.

According to Walensky, CDC data shows that a whopping 75% had not just one, or two, or even three, but actually had four or more comorbidities when they were recorded as a Covid-19 death.

Walensky acknowledged the number during an interview with Good Morning America.

“The overwhelming number of deaths – over 75% – occurred in people who had at least four comorbidities, so really these are people who were unwell to begin with.”

About time, Roch.
