

Coincidence? January 6 Pipe Bomb Discovered at Time of Breach of Capitol to 'Distract' Police

written by GEG | August 24, 2022

Capitol Police reported that the two pipe bombs were 'planted' as a diversion to distract law enforcement from the breach of the Capitol on January 6, which started just one minute after Capitol Police were informed about the pipe bombs. For the diversion effect to work, the pipe bombs would have had to be discovered in a manner that was closely synchronized with the initial attack on the Capitol perimeter at 12:50. If the bombs had been discovered hours earlier, there would have been evacuations and reinforced security. Why did the Secret Service miss seeing the bombs? The FBI is supposedly desperate to identify the pipe bomber, yet the agency refuses to release the surveillance footage of him allegedly planting the DNC pipe bomb.

It's been fully 19 months since the events of January 6, and the FBI's explanation for the January 6 pipe bombs is in fundamental conflict with a growing body of widely available facts. Revolver has chronicled the chasm between the official story and the mounting inconsistencies here, here and here.

But five facts about the pipe bombs are particularly strange, and their significance has never been fully explicated or connected. We will attempt to do so here.

Those five facts are:

1. The pipe bombs – according to the Capitol Police Chief Stephen Sund and Inspector General – were planted as a “diversion” to distract law enforcement shortly before 1 p.m., when the breach of the Capitol’s perimeter was just getting started. According to the official timeline, the breach started just one minute after Capitol Police were informed about the pipe bombs just two to three city blocks away.
2. The pipe bomber used an old-fashioned mechanical timer with a one hour max time setting, but planted the bombs at roughly 8 p.m. the night before January 6 – 17 hours before they were found.
3. The pipe bombs were constructed with no remote detonation ability, meaning their purpose as a diversion relied solely on the “luck” of being found at the right time, between noon and 1 p.m., to match the one-hour timer appearing to target the 1 p.m. Congressional certification vote.
4. The first pipe bomb was found at 12:40 p.m., with 20 minutes left on the timer, perfectly matching the exact timing needed both to “divert” police as the breach began at 12:50 p.m., and to convince police the bomb was timed to the 1 p.m. Congressional vote.
5. The timer didn’t just have 20 minutes left. It was left stuck on the 20 minute dial.

Did the pipe bomber just happen to luck into the craziest coincidence of the century – that his pipe bombs happened to be discovered at just the right time to create the desired diversion from the initial attack on the Capitol perimeter that began at 12:50 p.m., just ten minutes before Congress’ 1:00 p.m. session to certify the electoral votes?

Or did the pipe bomber somehow know the bombs would be found at exactly 20 minutes to 1 p.m. – and if he did know that, how did he know it?

A careful analysis of the implications of such questions turns out to be absolutely devastating to the official narrative of the January 6 pipe bombs.

The Diversion Theory

Stephen Sund, the Chief of the Capitol Police on the day of January 6, testified in numerous written and oral statements that he strongly believed the pipe bombs were not planted so much to detonate, but rather to divert law enforcement resources away from the Capitol as the attack on the perimeter began at 12:50 (the barricade was actually penetrated at 12:53).

In fact, Sund, the Capitol Police Chief, cited the pipe bombs being discovered at the same time as the initial attack on the Capitol perimeter as being one of the most compelling pieces of evidence that January 6 itself was a “coordinated” attack.
