A 60-year-old man from Sweden is facing two years in prison for posting a message on Facebook that read, "Only every fifth Somalis have IQ over 70." The prosecutor claims that the post targets a protected group of people based on their national origin and is therefore hate speech. The case is yet another example of what is now being referred to as "hate facts," statements that are generally true yet are negative towards politically protected groups.

After a group of boys brutally gang raped a woman for 10 hours, the Swedish media and social services characterized them as “victims” because of their ages, which ranged from 13 to 16 years old. A police spokesperson offered the excuse that the boys did not fully grasp their horrible crime. [If this is true, it is because they never have been held responsible for committing crimes in the past. Treating them now as victims will not reform them and will guarantee more crimes in the future.]

That is because they care more about the goal of building a global system without national boundaries – which means without nations – than they care about those who elect them to office and pay their salaries.]
